Poetrn From Harper's Magazine. THROUGH THE WHEAT. BY PLORENCE PERCY.

Through blue air slanting cleer and keen, e when my heart and I were young, We wandered, restless, by sea and strand, And lineured a little space among The grassy valleys of Switzerland Where watchful summits forever frown,

Wearing proudly their icy crown,

Often at eve, when the sun was low.

Two walked lovingly side by side,

Choosing a narrow path that led

Sunset touched him with rosy light,

I think of that simple, loving pair,

Whether under some mossy roof,

Their wedded spirits screnely blent,

They weave the even warp and woof-

And choosing cath a separate path,

Were thence divided for evermor-

Or whether still, as across the land

Of their quiet lives in calm content

Speaking softly, as lovers speak-

He with an air of manly pride, She with a blush on her sun-browned cheek,

They went-through the shadows damp

Hand in hand, through the evening red

On and on through the growing wheat.

Sunset brightened her loosened hair -Poer and plain, they were fair to sight, For youth and love are forever fair

And often as sunset charms the air— For the time and scree are vanished now-

And wonder whether they kept their vow

Or whether they paried in score and wrath, As myriads of lovers have done before,

The dewey shadows grow damp and sweet,

Perennial lovers, with hand in hand, They walk, knee-deep, in the growing wheat week a company was formed, the district named the San Jacinto Mining District, a mining code of laws framed, and preliminary steps taken energetically to work the lodes. This is good news for the miners elsewhere, and should encourage them to come here, if they wish to "make their piles," and they will not only enjoy the finest cilmate on earth, and obtain their supplies at a reasonable sum, but can afterward find a suitable homestead upon land that will compare favorably with any
